

The Ohio State University – Two Tenure-stream Faculty Positions, Open Rank

The Department of Agricultural, Environmental, and Development Economics seeks two faculty appointees. The rank for both positions is open, but the Department has a strong preference that at least one of the appointees has a proven record of research and publication. These appointees are expected to make important contributions to the Department's quest for pre-eminence in research, teaching, and outreach. We are seeking individuals who can provide exemplary leadership in our research and teaching programs (undergraduate and graduate), while continuing the tradition of outreach to state, national, and global stakeholders.

The position is broadly defined. Some possible areas of emphasis include agricultural, business, energy, and environmental economics broadly defined. Our over-riding objective in this search will be to appoint individuals who enhance our outstanding faculty.

Both positions are nine-month tenure track positions. Salaries will be commensurate with the appointees' qualifications and records. Candidates should possess a doctorate in economics or an applied economics field, or expect to have one by June 2008.

Applications will be accepted until September 30, 2007 or until the positions are filled. Nominations of qualified individuals are encouraged. Send a statement of interest and qualifications, a current CV, and the names of three references to:
